

Trails, Trappers, and Tender-Feet in the New Empire of Western Canada (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Trails, Trappers, and Tender-Feet in the New Empire of Western Canada Where the roads of men are ended, where stands the last crude shack, Where the mountains raise their barriers and the tenderfoot turns back;
Where theres nought ahead but Nature, and theres no such word as fail,
Where the well-worn ways are ended - tis here begins the trail.
And the man of the trail is the man of the wild, a creature unrecking and bold.
The trappers of fur, the hunters of game, or, perchance, the searchers of gold
Are the men who have starved and suffered, in the wilderness hewing a way,
And the trail they trod but yesterday is an empires path to-day.
