

The Call of the South (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Call of the South
Feeling any better to-day, Paul? Guess I'm getting round, and the big, bronzed-faced man raised his eyes to mine as he lay under the awning on the after deck of his pearling lugger. I sat down beside him and began to talk. A mile away the white beach of a little, land-locked bay shimmered under the morning sun, and the drooping fronds of the coconuts hung listless and silent, waiting for the rising of the south-east trade. Paul, I said, it is very hot here. Come on shore with me to the native village, where it is cooler, and I will make you a big drink of lime-juice. I helped him to rise - for he was weak from a bad attack of New Guinea fever - and two of our native crew assisted him over the side into my whaleboat. A quarter of an hour later we were seated on mats under the shade of a great wild mango tree, drinking lime-juice and listening to the lazy hum of the surf upon the reef, and the soft croo, croo of many crested pigeons in the branches above.
