

In the Fields on a Lunar Night

Thomas Martin Saturdays poetry explores the precise meeting point of light with darkness, good with evil, hope with utter despair. Some of his work is richest in imagery; other work is deeply spiritual in a manner that offers a point of absolute darkness and evil set off with a counterpoint of hope and light brought by the Creator. Still other work looks at the lunacy that is our modern life with all its useless striving for the material and for earthly power when we never securely possess or control it to begin with. Whatever your sensibilities, there is much here for you to reflect upon, to feel, to experience, for it is poetry that seeks to look into the dark places and it is poetry in motion.
