

Town or Country?

City life can be wildly energetic. There are no limitations to the new and exciting concepts promoted in the always-evolving fields of style, music and the visual arts. The daily influx of trend media broadcasts that inundate our TVs, PCs and smart phones offer an astonishing variety of products and services designed to entertain and educate the thriving city populace by providing immediate access to everything from breaking worldwide news events to whos jamming at the local niterie. The dynamic pulse of the city offers much to those who find excitement in her vitality. Out in the country, we enjoy a more simplistic existence and celebrate the beauty of the seasons year round. The sounds of nature, an almost non-existent crime rate and the absence of sirens wailing in the night make country living a thankful and cherished privilege. But, like any other worthwhile relationship, living a rural lifestyle is not entirely carefree. Town or Country is an essay of approximately 1100 words in length.
