Not illustrated. 1863 edition. Excerpt: ...with other parts of the State; seven have occurred south of this locality that were not observed here, and four north of it. Of the seven shocks noticed here five only were not observed in any adjacent district, and may be considered as strictly local. The periods of the year at which the shocks have occurred, is as follows: During the winter months, five; during the autumn, three; during the spring and summer, six. None have taken place between the vernal and autumnal equinoxes. We have records of considerable and violent volcanic phenomena throughout the northern seas, and islands both to the east and west of Alaska. The Russian frigate Dwina, while lying at Shaam Shu, brings intelligence of the outburst of a volcano in that vicinity about the 22nd of June, and on the 25th of the same month passed through fields of floating pumice: the latitude by observation being 50° 53' and longitude 158° 32' east per chronometer. An interesting account of a submarine volcano was reported by the Captain of the bark Alice Frazer, in latitude 54° 36'--longitude 135° west, which is as follows: A portion of the whaling fleet, four in number, were running through the Straits of Ourinnck. on the 20th of July last; while passing the straits a submarine volcano burst out, sending a column of water several hundred feet upward; immediately following this, immense masses of lava were projected into the air. and the sea for miles and for days afterward. was covered with floating fragments of pumice. The ships Scotland and Enterprise were nearer the volcano than the ships Frazer and Wm. Thomson; on the decks of the two former considerable pumice, lava, and ashes fell.

There were seven vessels in the straits at the time of the occurrence, three of which the names I...
