

The Lady of Fort St. John (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Lady of Fort St. John How can we care for shadows and types, when we may go back through history and live again with people who actually lived? Sitting on the height which is now topped by a Martello tower, at St. John in the maritime province of New Brunswick, I saw - not the opposite city, not the lovely bay; but this tragedy of Marie de la Tour, the tragedy which recalls (says the Abbe Casgrain in his Pelerinage au pays d'Evangeline) the romances of Walter Scott, and forces one to own that reality is stranger than fiction.
