

Musings of a Full Moon

This is a collection of musings, memoirs, and poetry written over a period of a few years that began as heartbreak and then slowly developed into an artistic calling of pieces written almost entirely during the time of full moon phase. I don't fully understand why this is so, but that seems to be the magic time of artistic reception where I release and allow myself to switch into a more focused, present world, something that can be difficult with survivors of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder. It is within these moments that I write about what I feel, see and hear in the world when I am able to press stop and be still. Within that stillness comes motion, but at a speed and attentive accuracy which allows the full moon spirits to congregate in my head, if only briefly, and create.
