

The Saracen, or Matilda and Malek Adhel, Vol. 1 of 2: A Crusade-Romance, from the French of Madame Cottin, with an Historical Introduction (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Saracen, or Matilda and Malek Adhel, Vol. 1 of 2: A Crusade-Romance, From the French of Madame Cottin, With an Historical Introduction Scarcely had he landed on the coasts of Italy when he ran to throw himself at the feet of the RO man Pontifi. Pope Urban 111. Received him as aprophet, applauded his design, and commissioned him to announce the approaching delivery of the Ho ly Land. The ardent missionary, his head bald, his feet bare, clad in a coarse gown, travelled over the provinces of Italy and France. Every where on his passage the women, children, and old men, broke out into loud cries the people raised their voice to heaven, to beg of the Almighty to cast a glance on his fat eurite city, and the warriors swore to take up arms and set her free from the yoke of the Infi dcls. In the midst of this general e ervescence, the head of Christendom convoked a council at Placentia, to lay before it the interests and the perils of the church. Two hundred bishops, four thousand ecclesiastics, and thirty thousand seculars of all conditions, repaired to that assembly. T he sittings were held in a plain near Placentia. Alex1s Commenes had sent ambassadors to that coun cil, to demand assistance of the Latin princes against the Mussulmen. They moved all hearts In speaking of the misfortunes of Jerusalem; they interested, at the same time, the policy of the pun ces, in laying before them the dangers that threaten.
