Not illustrated. 1898 Excerpt: ...or shall be fully blown Save in the forethought of the Eternal One. XIX. THE SAME CONCLUDED. Far yond this narrow parapet of Time, With eyes uplift, the poets soul should look Into the Endless Promise, nor should brook One prying doubt to shake his faith sublime; To him the earth is ever in her prime And dewiness of morning; he can see Good lying hid, from all eternity, Within the teeming womb of sin and crime; His soul should not be cramped by any bar, His nobleness should be so God-like high, That his least deed is perfect as a star, His common look majestic as the sky, And all oerflooded with a light from far, Undimmed by clouds of weak mortality. XX. TO M. O. S. Mary, since first I knew thee, to this hour, My love hath deepened, with my wiser sense Of what in Woman is to reverence; Thy clear heart, fresh as eer was forest-flower, Still opens more to me its beauteous dower;--But let praise hush,--Love asks no evidence To prove itself well-placed; we know not whence It gleans the straws that thatch its humble bower: We can but say we found it in the heart, Spring of all sweetest thoughts, arch foe of blame, Sower of flowers in the dusty mart, Pure vestal of the poets holy flame,--This is enough, and we have done our part If we but keep it spotless as it came. 1842. XXI. Our love is not a fading, earthly flower: Its winged seed dropped down from Paradise, And, nursed by day and night, by sun and shower, Doth momentarily to fresher beauty rise: To us the leafless autumn is not bare, Nor winters rattling boughs lack lusty green. Our summer hearts make summers fulness, where No leaf, or bud, or blossom may be seen: For natures life in loves deep life doth lie, Love,--whose forgetfulness is beautys death, Whose mystic key these cells of Thou and I Into ...
