

A Journey through Shadows and Sunbeams

LOST ECHO My love First blossomed In a weedy garden Where flowers struggled In the shadows For each kiss and caress From the sun From the rain. My love Is a lost echo Searching near by hills in vain For just one ear For just one ear to hear The song My soul is singing Like pebbles on the bottom of a sunlit brook, the poetic thoughts of author John McDermott are bright, smooth, yet sometimes hard. His testimonials describe a deep love of family, friends, and nature, while those on war, tragedy, and terrorism are sad reminders of mans inhumanity when power thrusts aside the love of God. With titles such as Forget Me Nots, The Wrong Words, and Soldier in the Car, McDermotts poems pour out his innermost feelings in the verses of A Journey through Shadows and Sunbeams.
