

Under Stone

Alec Rapkin was the UK's inaugural Poet Laureate of the Peak District from 2005-2007. In this selection of work Alec Rapkin explores the use of the poem as a tool of natural and social inquiry. He is ever-present as observer and narrator, visiting the ordinary places of our existence, in country or town. A major theme is the ubiquity of sex, and its ritual, as a key or temporary truce between the inner self and the outside world. Each is constantly seen in terms of the other, and in such a way as to breed hope rather than foreboding. Most days he's out in the countryside - and is glad if his poems can convey to others something of the spirit of the Peak District.
