Excerpt from Roister Doister: Written, Probably Also Represented, Before 1553 Certain. However. It is t it was the custom of Eton, about the feast of St. Andrew, for the Master to choose some Latin stage-play for the boys to act in the following Christmas holidays, and that he might sometimes order smart and witty English plays. Among the writings of Udall about the year says Warton, are recited 1: Concedia, and a tragedy De Pafatu, on the Papacy, written probably to be acted by his scholars: and it is equally probable that the English comedy was written with a like object for it is admirably adapted to be a good acting play, and the author aimws in the prologue that his models were Plautus and Terence, with whose writings his scholars were Intro.
