Not illustrated. 1889 Excerpt: ...worship. The people of the proposed states are also to disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands, lying within the boundaries of those states, and to all lands held by or for Indians. The debts and liabilities of the territories are to be assumed and paid by the states, which succeed the territories, respectively, and provision it to be made by each state for the establishment and maintenance of systems of public schools, which shall be open to all the children of the respective states, and free from sectarian control. There is a possibility, somewhat remote of course, but still a possibility, that there may be delay in the admission of one or more of the proposed states. The hitch can only take place if the people of either territory shall refuse, at the election, which takes place on October 1st, to ratify the constitution prepared by the convention for that particular territory. If that should occur then the present territorial form of government would continue, so far as that territory was concerned, while the governor of the territory set a day for another election and had another convention frame another and a more popular state constitution. The constitutional conventions of North Dakota and South Dakota are required to appoint a joint commission, composed of not less than three members of each convention, and this commission is to assemble at Bismarck and there agree upon an equitable division of the property of the territory. The commission is also to dispose of the public records and adjust and agree upon the amount of the debts and liabilities of the territory, which shall be assumed and paid by each of the proposed states of North Dakota and South Dakota. This agreement is to be incorporated in the constitutions of the two...
