

The Diamond Cross Mystery

Chester K. Steele was a pseudonym of the Stratemeyer Syndicate, founded by Edwin Stratemeyer. He wrote eleven Horatio Alger titles, and went on to produce series including The Rover Boys, The Bobsey Twins, and Tom Swift, hiring ghost writers to produce the books under specific pen names. The Diamond Cross Mystery is a one of a series intended for an older audience than the childrens books Stratemeyer normally produced. It features the reluctant detective Colonel Ashley and his Negro servant Shag. Only the first, The Mansion of Mystery, was written by Stratemeyer. In The Diamond Cross Mystery, Colonel Ashley must solve the murder of the proprietor of a jewelry store. The Colonel would prefer to be fishing, but crimes have a way of interrupting his reading of Waltons Complete Angler.
