

The Silkie

In the Hebrides a silkie is one of the seal folk: half man, half sea creature. Following the theme of Celtic legend he rises from the sea one night and, as in the folk song, mates with a woman of the land outside her lonely croft on the Western Isles of Scotland. By the legend it is the silkies right to reclaim his child when it is born and return it to the sea. But Mary McBride bears twins and only one child is reclaimed. The Silkie is the story of her two sons one in human form but for the webbed feet of his father, the other a furred sea creature raised among the sea folk. Like their father before them, neither son is completely accepted by his own kind and each seeks to escape the confines of his environment in a hopeless search for a true identity. When the young silkie is discovered wounded in the sea off Cape Cod by a marine biologist he brings about desperate consequences for them both.
