

The Twilight Years - book 2, the twilight years

The earth is dying. In the future, mankind has decimated the planet. The pressure of population has forced half of humanity to live in underground cities. In an effort to survive, the ecosystem has dramatically changed. It has branched out into three distinct climatic zones. To help its equilibrium, sixty percent of what would have fallen on the planet as water, is now falling as snow in the north and south poles. Against this background, a water terrorist group is holding the world to ransom with a nuclear bomb placed in the arctic. Chosen for their various skills and knowledge, four men and four women are thrown together in a race against time to diffuse the bomb in the arctic. A far greater crisis awaits humanity. The moon's orbit around the earth is changing. The new trajectory will send the moon crashing into the planet. For humanity and the earth, those last few years will be their twilight years.
