

The Vanishing Fleets (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Vanishing Fleets This book makes no attempt to convey a lesson. It does, however, try to give a note of warning. National patriotism, national wealth, and national resources would all prove unavailing if the United States were suddenly confronted by a determined enemy with a preponderance of guns manned by veterans. The writer frankly admits he has no sympathy with those watchdogs of the treasury who decry naval expenditures and the persistent increase of the navy. He does not believe the navy adequate for the protection of the nation, nor does he think the army sufficient. He believes Governmental economies along other lines would enable the nation to bring its defense up to an invincible point without working any material hardship on the gentlemen of the trusts who loudly claim to pay nearly all the taxes. Some argument has taken place in the press regarding the possibility of such a discovery as is brought out in the radioplanes.
