See the same, p. 458. n. 78. mendous sacrifice, he does not touch the ohlation before he has prayed that the grace of the Lord may be with you! and ye have answered, And with thy spirit! by which answer ye remind yourselves, that it is not the minister who effects any thing in this matter, neither is the consecration of the gifts there lying the work of human nature, but that it is the grace of the Spirit, then present and descending upon the elements, that makes this mystical sacrifice. There are several other passages to the same purpose in his other Homilies<sup>52</sup> upon the Gospels and St. Pauls Epistles, which, because the reader may find them at large in the extract of the Liturgy above out of St. Chrysostoms works<sup>53,1</sup> will not here repeat. The same custom was always observed in the Latin Church. For Tertullian plainly refers to it when he<sup>54</sup> objects it to the heretics, that they gave the peace to all without exception; implying that the Church used it, but with some distinction. Optatus<sup>55</sup> says, the Donatists retained the form, but grossly abused it in their practice. They could not omit the solemn words: they said Peace be unto you 1 But why, says he,dost thou salute men with that which thou hast not? Why dost thou name peace that hast destroyed it? Thou salutest men with the words of love and peace, who hast nothing of the reality and substance of it. In the Spanish Church they used a like form, though not altogether the same. For, by an order of the first Council of Braga<sup>56</sup> it was appointed, that both bishops and presbyters should use one and the same form of salutation, that is, TJie Lord be with you I
