

How God Uses Me

Christopher Lamar Jackson was born on May 24, 1973, in a little town called Mount Olive located in the state of North Carolina, and found himself from the age of five years old to be intrigued by many books of the Bible and who our true Father is. Throughout his life, he found himself feeling distant from many things and many people, a little different if you will. It wasn't because of any deformities or illnesses, but because he would much rather be listening to a little voice inside his head than to be running outside with all the other children. As time elapsed in his life, he became very close with that inner voice that he would come to know as Father, the God of all things. Pressing on in his life through many trails and tribulations, heartaches and pains, now trying to be the one thing he's not (normal), he will find his travels as a young man both natural and spiritual to very breathtaking, but that's another book. Now knowing what God has been calling for him to do in this life, he is on task, and it is because of his voice that he delivers such words that you will find here in this collection of poems, conversations, and emotions wrapped up and put on paper.
