

Winter Mournings

Western New York winters have brought only tragedy and despair to Tom and Kathy, two total strangers who are emotionally isolated but find themselves bonded first as co-workers, then friends, then lovers. Kathy Miller, widowed since she was eighteen after only three days of marriage, felt warm and cozy living with her parents. Since their deaths, however, she is destitute and surrounded by too many memories in a house once filled with love. With a husband and both parents victims of winter car accidents, she feels like she's in a tomb herself. At twenty-eight, she plans to spend the rest of her life alone. She carries a tremendous amount of guilt over her husband's death. Pete was killed when she sent him to the store, a ploy to avoid making love with him as she found no pleasure in it. In her mind, love equals pain, and she's avoided a relationship with any man since Pete's death. Kathy puts the family home on the market and moves to Niagara Falls with her cat, Eli, against the advice of her two best friends, Cheryl and Helen. She begins work at Walker Construction, hoping to start a new life on her own. Tom Morgan is resigned to remaining womanless for the rest of his life. He has two children and a money-hungry ex-wife; and he must care for his younger brother Mark, brain damaged after a winter auto accident. His parents were killed three years before in a boating accident. At thirty-two, Tom is sure that he has too much baggage for any woman to handle. He's been working at Walker Construction long enough to know he has to get out and hopes to break free soon. Leland Walker is an evil man who tries to use shoddy materials in his building projects, which include many school districts, and he and Tom have clashed over safety issues since day one. As Tom and Kathy get to know each other, they are forced to reconsider their futures. Their first meeting was a disaster, with Tom warning Kathy not to take the job, and Kathy calling Tom a little man. However, after weeks of daily chats in the office, they find themselves drawn to each other, both realizing they are keeping each other going at drab, depressing Walker Construction. Can Tom and Kathy find happiness together? Or will the evil forces plotting their destruction succeed, and destroy their friendship as easily as debris flowing over the mighty Cataract.
