I Galveston and Amelia Island were carried into effect, and that the successive gangs of desperadoes, Scotch, French, Creole, and North Americans, that no public exertions have been constituting the republic of the Florida. Yet such is the propensity of our people to sympathize with the South Americans, that no feeble exertion is now making to rouse a party in this country against the government of the Union, and against the President, for having issued orders to put down this host of freebooters at our doors. Your preparations for the next spring elections in Massachusetts appear to be judicious, and I hope they will be successful. I neither see nor hear anything more of Brighter Views 1 nor of Old North 2 than what you tell me, and there is at present not much to be apprehended from the authors of either of them. We have the prospect of a troublesome Indian war in the South, and its bearings upon our political affairs may be more extensive and important than is expected. I am, etc. TO CHARLES COLLINS WashInpton, 31 December, 1817.
